"Manifest Destiny."

EDITOR BULLETIN:—

The Star has within a few days devoted two articles to an elucidation of the above melancholy chestnut, and it is possible that future platitudes will find themselves hung on the same old peg.

"Manifest destiny" was old, as a shibboleth, when Pharaoh commanded the Israelites to make bricks without straw, and has come down through the ages as the rusty weapon of superstition and tyranny alike, the idiom of ancient barbarity and modern despotism. It was the sort of fantastic expression that nerved the iron heel of Attila to trample on human rights, and sent Vigilius to the stake. Every corruption and injustice which has cast an evil shadow over humanity from the days of Moloch down to modern predestinationism, under which Calvin roared his heretic, has had its root in this hoary barnacle
